

PROPERTY SETTLEMENT - WHAT THE COURT TAKES INTO ACCOUNT

The Family Law Act puts in place a four or five stage process

1. What property is there and how much is it worth?

Values of all property and financial resources need to be obtained. Usually the property and its value can be determined quite easily but in some cases this can prove difficult. Remember superannuation is now included as property.

2. What have the contributions of the parties been?

These are both financial and non-financial. These may include paid employment, homemaking duties (including caring for the children), inheritances, workers compensation payments and the like.

The period of contribution is usually from the date of cohabitation to the date of hearing, but each case is different. This is covered in Section 79 of the Family Law Act.

3. Does there need to be a financial adjustment?

Section 75(2) of the Family Law Act provides for financial adjustments to occur on property settlement so that one party might receive greater or lesser than their contribution. This process is sometimes called “future factors” or “needs factors”. It is often because of this section that there is not an equal division of property. This is because it is felt necessary to compensate the party with greater need by giving that party a greater share of the property. The matters taken into account include:-

- the age and state of health of each party;
- the income, property and financial resources of each party;
- the physical and mental capacity of each party for appropriate gainful employment;
- whether either party has the care or control of a child of the marriage under 18 years;
- a standard of living that in all the circumstances is reasonable;
- whether one party needs to undertake some training to obtain employment;
- the duration of the marriage and the extent to which it has affected the earning capacity of the party seeking maintenance;
- the need to protect a party who wishes to continue that party’s role as a parent;
- if either party is cohabiting with another person;
- the financial circumstances relating to that;
- any child support paid or payable;
- any fact or circumstances which the justice of the case requires to be taken into account (this can include evidence of gambling, drinking and domestic violence)

4. Coming up with a fair result.

Section 79(2) of the Family Law Act says that the result must be just and equitable.

5. Spousal Maintenance.

One party may be obliged to maintain the other financially. This could be a periodic sum such as '$x' per week or a lump sum or portion of the property in addition to property settlement. Many of the factors considered are those relating to needs. Usually the Family Court does not order final spousal maintenance in addition to property settlement.

Additional Matters

Full and frank disclosure of Financial Circumstances

Both parties have to do this! If you aren't totally honest, you may have to pay in more ways than one for your lack of openness.

Child Support

Sometimes the Court might order lump sum or periodic child support in addition to property settlement.

Costs

Usually each party bears their own costs and this may be substantial. If offers are made (or there is some other factor of the particular case), costs orders may be made against one party to pay the other party's costs. This may be several thousand dollars.

Time Limit

An application to the Court for property settlement or spousal maintenance must be made within 1 year of divorce unless the Court gives permission to apply after that time.

Domestic Violence

The Family Court can in addition to other powers, award damages for assaults, nervous shock and similar actions caused by domestic violence. These amounts may be substantial and may be in addition to property settlement although it may be very difficult to bring the matter to Court or to defend it.

De Facto Relationships

The law is similar for some disputes. The Property Law Act (a Queensland Act as opposed to the Family Law Act which is a Commonwealth Act) takes an almost identical approach to the Family Law Act for steps 1 to 4 above, although step 5 DOES NOT APPLY.

However, if the parties resided outside Queensland or had property outside Queensland then interstate laws (different to Queensland laws) may apply. Generally, superannuation cannot be split. The courts hearing such a claim are the Supreme, District or Magistrates Courts, not the Family.
